U.S. Urges Russian to Meet Bush

By Fred Farris onal Herald Tribune

WASHINGTON -The Reagan administration, calling for "greater mutual understanding and con-structive cooperation" between the Soviet Union and the United States, said on Monday that it would welcome a meeting now between Vice President George Bush and the new Soviet leader. Kon-stantin U. Chernenko.

The White House spokesman, Larry M. Speakes, said that any eventual summit meeting between Mr. Chernenko and President Ronald Resear, however, must be "well prepared" and would depend on "reasonable promise for success

Those were the criteria that Mr. Reagan used previously in discussing the possibility of meeting President Yuri V. Andropov, who died

Little Change Is Expected In Policies Toward West

The official New China News Agency swiftly reported the ap-pointment of Mr. Chernenko as general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party, but did not immediately comment. Deputy Prime Minister Wan Li, who flew to Yuri V. Andropov's funeral, said Chinese-Soviet relations should be normalized. He is the highest-ranking Chinese official to go to Moscow in 19 years.

David Steel, leader of the British two weeks ago, called Mr. Chernenko a "stopgap" who "of all possible candidates is the least interested in foreign policy."

Volker Ruhe, deputy leader of the ruling Christian Democrats in West Germany, saw little chance of any changes in Soviet foreign po-licy "because we are dealing with policies that are determined colleclantic Treaty Organization said tively in the Polithuro." NATO officials said the Soviet leadership had demonstrated an innate conservatism and rejection of change by choosing the 72-year-old functionary over younger, more dy-namic candidates. "He's not the sort of man to break the mold," a senior political official said. "Don't look for any spectacular initiatives from him." A NATO Soviet analyst said Mr.

The formal selection was made Monday morning at a meeting of the Communist Party Central nittee. The succession was actually decided by the 12 members of the Poliburo, the country's ruling body.

It marked an unusual comeback for the 72-year-old party bureau-crat who owed his prominence to his long personal association with Leonid I. Brezhnev. But he was passed over in favor of Mr. Androoov after Mr. Brezhnev's death in lovember 1982.

In what must be a moment of singular personal triumph, Mr. Chernenko reached the peak of Communist authority on his own, rather than on the strength of backing by his former mentor. He is the oldest man to take charge in the departures in either foreign or domestic policies. A brief section on foreign relations was conciliatory and included no direct attacks on the United States. He pledged to continue the policy of peaceful coexistence and asserted that "we don't need military superiority, we do not intend to dictate our will to others. Mr. Chemenko coupled this with an assessment that the threat to world peace was posed "by the rockless adventurist activities of the aggressive powers of imperialism."

Alluding to President Ronald Chernenko said that the Soviet Union "will not allow the existing military balance to be upset." "We will see to it that our coun-

Speaking about domestic issues, Mr. Chernenko appeared to em-brace all Mr. Andropov's initiatives, including the need for "a serious restructuring" of the economy. It is premature to conclude, bowever, that be intends to push for basic change as vigorously as did Mr.

Andropov.

While it was appropriate under the circumstances for Mr. Chernenko to pay a warm tribute to his predecessor, he was not obligated to adopt specific aspects of his pro-gram. Yet Mr. Chernenko appeared to have done so, with some qualifications, presumably because Mr. Andropov had put supporters in key positions and these men were expected to keep up the pressure for economic change. Mr. Chernenko's rise to the top position seems to rest on a combination of his own talent for political maneuvering and the fact that none of the vounger members of solidify claims to the leadership.

As Mr. Andropov's health deteriorated due to a chronic kidney ailment and other problems, Mr. Chemenko had patiently rebuilt his constituency within the ruling group during the past six months. According to sources, Mr. Cher-nenko's claim to leadership was never questioned after Mr. Andropov's death.

Although there have been ru-mors that Mikhail S. Gorbachov. 52, and Grigori V. Romanov, 61 were being considered as possible alternatives, their candidacies were never seriously considered by the leadership, the sources said.

Western diplomatic sources speculated that Mr. Chernenko's smooth election may have been based on a power-sharing arrangment worked out in advance and on Mr. Cherneoko's assurances that he would not try to settle scores with those who spurned him in favor of Mr. Andropov 15

LONDON - NATO should stop trying to match Soviet nuclear firepower in Europe and emphasize a strategy of minimum deterrence, to avoid raising unwarranted fears in Warsaw Pact countries, a group of leading British military experts

New York Times Service TORONTO - In a small coach house on the campus of the University of Toronto, the flat couch from which Marshall McLuhan dictated couch from which marshall McLuhan dictated his writings that changed the way the world thought about communications is preserved much as it was when be died in 1980.

His self-described disciples are using the same coach house to pursue research as startling as any of that of their intellectual master. They are examining the idea of nuclear weapons as an information medium and have reached the tentative conclusion that the bomb might be a good

"I'm absolutely delighted the bomb is there," said Derrick de Kerckhove, acting director of the McLuhan Program in Culture and Technology. "It's about time we had something to bring us together."

The essential thought appears to be that the bomb has become a modero myth, holding a power over the culture's thinking previously beld by religion. Further, that myth has become Hussein and Mr. Mubarak, both a physical part of everyone's brain and is now ders of moderate Arab nations acting as a strong unifying force.

MOSCOW — As has happened before, the world is learning more about a Soviet leader in death than during his lifetime.

For example, the lying-in-state ceremonies for Yuri V. Andropov, who died Thursday at the age of 69, have revealed that he had a living wife, Tatyana

At the outset of his 15-month tenure in the Kremlin many Western reports described him as a widower. Six weeks ago the U.S. Embassy here was sufficiently doubtful that it asked the Foreign Ministry whether President Ronald Reagan's New Year greetings should be addressed to both the Soviet leader and his

The answer was affirmative, but doubt lingered until the lying-in-state. In the front row of seats reserved for the dead leader's family sat a woman of late middle age identified as Mr. Andropov's widow. Officials supplied her first name.

Beside her were Mr. Andropov's son, Igor, a diplomat, and Irina, his daughter, a journalist, both well known in Moscow. Some obituaries oo Mr. Andropov appearing in the West said that his wife died about nine years ago, a fact attributed to Soviet sources. When officials at the lying-in-state were queried about this, they were noncommittal. This left it unclear to analysts here whether Tatyana Andropov is the mother of the Soviet leader's children, or his second wife. Watching the members of the Politburo offering their condolences provided other insights. For months the talk around Moscow was that the leaders with the closest personal ties to Mr. Andropov were the defense minister, Marshal Dmitri F. Ustinov, and Mikhail S. Gorbachov, who at 52 is the youngest member of the Soviet officials scorn the weight attached to such matters by Western analysts, but when the Politburo approached the family it was Marshal Ustinov and Mr. Gorbachov who lingered longest with Mrs. Andropov, embracing her in the manner of intimates. Other leaders, notably Konstantin U. Chernenko, appeared to be less close.

The official medical bulletin on Mr. Andropov offered other revelations. The Soviet leader's illness,

REPORTER'S NOTEBOOK

enveloped in secrecy as long as he lived, was treated in death with almost excessive candor.

In early December a senior Kremlin spokesman, Leonid M. Zamyatin, implied at a news conference that the party leader's problem was a cold, a repetition of the explanation Mr. Andropov himself gave in a message when he missed the Nov. 7 military parade.

The medical hulletin made a mockery of these and other assurances from Soviet officials who played down Mr. Andropov's problems.

Yevgeny M. Chazov, the Soviet leader's principal physician, along with two other members of the Soviet Academy of Medical Sciences, attested that Mr. Andropov's kidneys had ceased functioning in February 1983 and that he had been on an artificial kidney machine - the medical term is dialysis - ever since. The bulletin did not mention a cold or "croup," as it was called by Viktor G. Afanasyev, editor in chief of Pravda, who predicted only three weeks ago that Mr. Andropov would soon be returning to public view.

As has been the case with most Politburo members who have died in office since Stalin, the bulletin offered details that could be deciphered only by medical experts. It said that Mr. Andropov suffered from interstitial nephritis, nephrosclerosis, secondary hyphenomena of cardiovascular insufficiency and the stopping of breathing, death came at 16 hours 50 minutes on Feb. 9, 1984."

The precision of such hulletins has always fascinated Westerners. One theory is that the documents reflect the concern for formalism and legality that runs through much of Soviet official life. A more cynical interpretation is that the violent death that afflicted Soviet leaders under Stalin has left his successors with a determination to show the Soviet people and the world that nothing irregular has occurred.

The medical hulletin offered post facto vindication of accounts that circulated widely in the West during the six months that Mr. Andropov was absent from the Kremlin. The essentials—the diabetes, the kidney trouble, the dialysis - had been reported fully in Europe and the United States, in versions that drew on unofficial sources in Moscow.

These accounts were played back into the Soviet Union by Western radio broadcasts, and a large oumber of Russians seemed to trust them.

In late December, Mr. Andropov sent a speech to a Central Committee meeting attributing his absence to "temporary causes" and implying that he had been preparing to attend op to the last minute. The speech was one of at least a dozen pronouncements issued in his name after he disappeared from public view on Aug. 18. The purpose, in retrospect, seems to have been to uphold the notion of a leader "managing in full measure party and state affairs, including ques-tions pertaining to the U.S.S.R. Defense Council," as Mr. Zamyatin put it on Dec. 5.

Now, Western diplomats wonder. The medical bul-letin's reference to Mr. Andropov's kidneys' having failed in February 1983 suggests that his viability as pertension, diabetes mellitus, complicated by a chronic kidney deficiency," and added, "with the mounting months after he succeeded Brezhnev.

After the visit of President Manno Koivisto of Finland in June, when the Soviet leader was supported by aides as he walked, doubts must have spread widely through the power structure. Some diplomats believe that Soviet officials in contact with Mr. Andropov after his meeting with a group of U.S. senators on Aug. 18, the last time he appeared in public, may have known all along that a return to full activity was

If so, there was a prolonged campaign to lend an aura of authority to a leader whose political prospects were decisively prejudiced. Those subscribing to this view pose several questions. Did the Politburo mount a charade to prevent public despondency and a joss of confidence on the part of foreign governments? Did the Politburo keep Mr. Andropov in his post because even from a hospital bed he was considered the best available leader, or were the members too divided to be able to pick a successor? And what does it say about the Kremfin's veracity if its statements on a subject as important as the leader's health could be so mislead

If there was a charade, it may have involved painful sacrifices by the Andropov family. Igor, the Soviet leader's only son, did oot leave the Stockholm disarmament conference he had been attending since mid-January until Thursday, the day of his father's death, and by the time his plane landed in Moscow, it was too

Marshal Ustinov canceled a planned trip to India six days earlier, suggesting that the situation had become serious. The implication for some diplomats was that the leadership may have deferred Igor Andropov's return to avoid signaling how dire the situation

Chernenko's Rise in Bureaucracy Linked to Close Ties With Brezhnev

By Dusko Doder

Washington Past Service MOSCOW — In just 15 months, Konstantin U. Chernenko has risen to the top of the Soviet Communist Party after suffering a political defeat that seemed to send his career into eclipse. The death of Yuri V. Andropov, who defeated Mr. Chernenko in the 1982 succession struggle after Leo-nid I. Brezhnev's death, again opened the road to the top for the 72-year-old party bureaucrat, a relative oewcomer to the ruling Polit-

That the Soviet leadership turned to a man it had spurned only 15 months ago seems to illustrate the importance of bureaucratic placement in the Kremlin political hierarchy and the absence of strong younger contenders for the leadership.

Mr. Chernenko's links with Brezhnev dated from 1950 when Brezhnev was appointed first secretary of the Moldavian region and inherited Mr. Chernenko as his chief of propaganda and agitation. Brezhnev liked his propaganda tention to detail. When Brezhnev's political fortunes rose and he became an alternate member of the Politburo (it was then called the Presidium) in 1956, he brought Mr. Chernenko to Moscow. Mr. Chernenko was named chief of a mass propaganda section in the Central Committee. After his appointment as Soviet president, or titular head of state. in 1960, Brezhnev made Mr. Chernenko manager of his office and chief of staff, a position he held until Brezhnev's death in November 1982.

Mr. Chernenko reached the peak of bureaucratic authority after Brezhnev became general secretary of the Communist Party in 1964, replacing Nikita S. Khrushchev. Mr. Chernenko was made head of the General Department of the Central Committee, which put him pov's drive for economic reforms in charge of the work of the party's top policymaking bodies.

In the late 1970s, Mr. Chernenko emerged from the obscurity of Brezhnev's office, becoming the leader's principal traveling com-panion, a leading spokesman and the recipient of honors. It is possible that, at least in part, his new prominence was directly linked to Brezhnev's failing health.

Toward the end of Brezhnev's life, Mr. Chernenko was, in effect, the leader's alter ego and deputized for him during periods of illness. Dear comrades, I cordially thank the members of the Central Committee for the great honor bestowed on me election as general secretary of the Central Committee....

Yuri Vladimirovich Andropov was destined, comrades, to work at the head of our party for a short, painfully short, time. . . . He passed away at the very height of a great and tense work aimed at powerfully accelerating the development of the national economy, at overcoming the difficulties which our country encountered at the turn of the 1980s. ... Further advancing by collective efforts the work started under the leadership of Yuri Vladimirovich is the best way of paying tribute to his memory, of ensuring continuity in politics. . . .

You know, comrades, what immense attention our Central Committee, Political Bureau of the Central Committee and Yuri Vladimirovich Andropov paid of late to questions of perfecting the work of the state apparatus, of improving the style of party leadership. One of them is a clear distinction between the functions of party committees and the tasks of state and economie bodies, elimination of duplication in their performance. ... Frankly speaking, not everything has been properly adjusted here. It happens that workers at soviets, ministries, and enterprises do not display the occessary independence, but shift on party bodies the matters which they should handle themselves. The practice of substituting for economic managers disenchants the cadres. Moreover, this harbors the danger of weakening the role of the party committee as a body of political guidance. In one sense, Monday's selection seems a victory for the old guard Soviet leaders and particularly for the bureaucracy they dominate. Officials have speculated that the old guard was afraid of giving power to a younger and more dynamic leader for fear of losing their positions.

At the same time, Mr. Chernenko's selection amounts to a cautious interim solution. Despite his age, he appears to be in good health. But he is known to suffer from hay fever and he had been ill for about two months in the first part of 1983, according to his of-

Not Just for Hong Kong

In an obviously calculated remark during his American tour, China's Premier Zhao Ziyang sang the praises of capitalism — in Hong Kong. Although some capital is fleeing the colony, be said, more is flowing in because "conditions for investment in Hong Kong are better than any area in the Asia-Pacific region." No booster of that bustling, Britishruled entrepot would claim more.

Why does Mr. Zhao bend ideology to praise Hong Kong? For a good, practical reason: China benefits from the crown colony's prosperity. Hong Kong is the source of a third of Beijing's foreign exchange and provides vital contacts with the West. Thus China promises to leave this golden goose alone - minus a few feathers - when Britain's 99-year lease to most of the territory expires in 1997.

That is just 13 years away. China is pressing Britain to agree this year to a new arrangement that would preserve Hong Kong as a capitalist enclave nestling against the Communist mainland for a further half-century. Even if for some reason Prime Minister Thateber balks, China says it will unilaterally decree the plan to reassure Hong Kong's 5 million inhabitants. Nearly all are ethnic Chinese, many of whom fled from Communist tyranny. China would let Hong Kong retain its convertible currency, legal system and free-port status. Beijing offers autonomous home rule: the exact form would be decided in consultation with "compatriots," But what China cannot decree is trust in the arrangement so that the capitalist goose can go on coexisting with a plain Beijing duck under one flag.

The problem for Britain is not Hong Kong's wealthy Chinese elite of 40,000, who have been steadily exporting capital, including perhaps $1 billion that bas turned up in New York real estate. The harder question involves some halfmillion Westernized Chinese, who have reason to mistrust Beijing but whose British passports no longer entitle them to migrate to Britain.

The British have run Hong Kong through an appointed governor and a legislative council. The people of Hong Kong are accustomed to free speech and a free press. China insists that it will respect these freedoms, but not "slan-der" and "counterrevolution." That is an elastie and troubling fontnote. Would it allow pro-Taiwanese publications? Or is Hong Kong to enjoy only the promise of freedom that is offered the rest of China by its constitution?

Prime Minister Thatcher's hand for pinning down these points looks weaker than it is. Britain no longer challenges China's sovereignty over Hong Kong. To defend its subjects there it can deploy principles, not gunboats. But China plainly needs and wants a thriving Hong Kong - and a deal that might strengthen its argument for a gradual, peaceful reunion with Taiwan. Just possibly, common interest will rise above ideology. If Britain can nail down convincing guarantees, diplomacy may open the way for a wider reconciliation - and not just for Hong Kong.

Nuclear Proliferation

Nobody much likes thinking about the ominous questions of nuclear proliferation, but it remains true that the threat of nuclear weapons is not limited to the armories of the five powers that acknowledge having them. Perhaps six or eight others are moving toward nuclear weapons, and some are countries with histories of radically unstable and aggressive politics. America cannot do much about the technology that these countries already command, but it can do a lot to slow down the flow of crucial equipment and materials to them.

The Senate will have an opportunity to make an important contribution when, some time this month, the Export Administration Act finally comes to the floor. A bipartisan group of senators led by Gordon Humphrey of New Hampshire intends to offer an amendment tightening the standards under which the United States permits exports with implications for nuclear arms. Those exports would be prohibited to countries that have refused to open their nuclear facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

The amendment would allow the president to make exceptions when be was prepared to cite reasons of national security. But this change in the law would end the practice of licensing extremely sensitive exports inconspicoously at low levels of government.

The amendment is a response to two egregious cases last year. In one the Reagan administration routinely approved a transfer of beavy water to Argentina, which subsequently announced that it possesses all the processes needed for the manufacture of weapons. In the other case Secretary of State George Sbultz assured his hosts during a visit to India that the United States would allow them to buy certain equipment for their Tarapur reactor. India has already exploded what it calls a "device" and the rest of the world calls a bomb. Neither India nor Argentina permits IAEA inspection of all its nuclear facilities. The Indian sale, incidentally, seems recently to have been derailed, which casts some doubt on all the assertions that this kind of thing is essential to U.S. diplomacy in South Asia.

The technology now in the hands of Argentina and India - not to mention South Africa, Iraq, Pakistan and the rest - is irrevocably theirs. But that is all the greater reason for the United States to be careful about certain further sales and the conditions under which they are licensed. It is important to give great visibility to these sales, and to force the people at the top of government — both the U.S. government and the recipient - to think carefully about what they are doing. That is the purpose of the amendment now being put forward by Senator Humphrey and his colleagues. People who are uneasy about the proliferation of nuclear weapons will want to see it passed... -- THE WASHINGTON POST.

Chernenko: Not an Innovator

Konstantin Chernenko would seem to have been the least apt among the potential successors of Yuri Andropov to inject a bit of imagination into Soviet foreign policy. His experience in foreign affairs is slight. Andrei Gromyko, the eternal foreign minister, will no doubt play an important role in the new leadership, and this prospect, too, hardly suggests that much change is in store.

Mr. Andropov was supposed to be a transitional secretary-general between the generation of leaders promoted at the time of the Stalinist purges of the 1930s and the younger generation, but be died too soon. The choice of Mr. Chernenko appears to he a stopgap measure. For purely biological reasons, his rule will doubtless not last long. Picking a man in his 60s would have blocked the way for the younger leaders for a much longer spell. - Le Monde (Paris).

Reagan: A Better Second Term

Let me say I expect Reagan to be a better president in the second term than he has been in the first. The reason I say that is because he is gradually learning that the real world of the presidency requires him to have around him people who administer the government rather than people who can promote ideology.

I expect for that reason he's likely to have continuing disenchantment with his original primary constituency, who tend to be quite ideologically oriented. My impression of Ron-ald Reagan is that he doesn't just want to promote ideas. He wants to be president of the United States, and I respect him for that. And my impression is that the next administration will have more people around him who feel as he does and less people who want to

Of course, [Yuri Andropov] was unjust to dissidents, and he did not have a deep enough insight into all the problems. He did not see the necessity of profound reforms in our economy and our political structure. But be was concerned with major problems of state like fighting corruption. He improved the economy in some respects, and be dealt a strong blow to the Malia-style leadership that came into being under Brezhnev, which was characterized by corruption and inefficiency.

I can't say that [Mr. Andropov] had a very broad world view — to the contrary, it was very limited. I believe that be sincerely wanted peace and cuts in arms spending, but here he failed. Perhaps he could have improved international relations, including Soviet-American relations, since he had more ability in this respect than any other politician in the country. But after his initial failures, be died before he could suggest any alternatives for changing the international situation.

Reagan's Record on Arms Control: A Waste of Three Years

McLEAN, Virginia — President Reagan has started his reelection campaign with a public relations attempt to show that be and his administration have been serious about controlling nuclear weapons and reducing the risk of nuclear war. But this public relations blitz does nothing to change his dismal record on the nuclear war issue.

The blitz began with the president's deceptively placatory speech designed to convince the allies that he really wished accommodation with the Soviet Union.

Next, Paul H. Nitze, Mr. Resgan's negotiator for intermediaterange nuclear forces talks at Gene-va, and then Edward L. Rowny, his negotiator at the strategic arms re-duction talks, appeared in print and on television arguing that the administration's negotiating positions were sound and flexible.

Secretary of State George Shultz said in Stockholm on Jan. 17 that Washington was ready "for early progress" once talks resumed.

In fact, the president deserves scant credit for any improvement in his arms control policy. Only under pressure from people in America and Europe did be initiate any arms control negotiations.

The talks on intermediate-range forces were started 10 months into his term and then only at European leaders' insistence — demands gencrated by the public outcry over deployment of Pershing-2 and cruise missiles. The strategic arms reduction talks were not begun until 17 months after Mr. Reagan took over, and again only as a result of widespread American public alarm among freeze movement activists, physicians, scientists, lawyers and other concerned organizations. What in fact has the President done to curtail the arms race? · He postponed indefinitely the negotiations on a comprehensive test ban treaty even though these talks had been supported by every Republican and Democratic presi dent since Eisenhower. The need to do more nuclear testing was cited as the reason for putting off the talks.

• He sent the threshold test ban and peaceful nuclear explosion treaties, signed by Presidents Nixon and Ford, back to Moscow for revision. · He refused to resume discussion on limiting anti-satellite weapons and instead moved with high priority to begin testing an advanced weapons system for destroying Soviet space vehicles. · He proposed vast and expensive programs for ballistic missile defense systems, which could require abrogation of the Anti-Ballisuc Missile Treaty of 1972, the Outer Space Treaty of 1967 and the Limited Test Ban Treaty of 1963.

Negotiations have been used not merely to cover inaction in real arms control but also to justify the procurement of new nuclear war fighting weapons as bargaining chips.

The president's original position at the intermediate-range forces talks — the so-called zero option for ons aimed at Europe, in exchange for U.S. agreement to forgo the de-ployment of cruise and Pershing-2 missiles — was palpably nonnego-tiable, and administration spokesmen admitted that they expected no encouraging Soviet response until after the Pershing-2 and cruise missiles were deployed in Europe.

Now that such deployment has begun, the Russians have predictably broken off negotiations and begun to pursue an equally misguided course — deploying more mis-siles aimed at Western Europe.

The only ray of light in these talks was the so-called walk in the woods of Mr. Nitze and his counterpart. Yuli Kvitsinsky, in which the chief American negotiator privately offered to postpone deployment of the Pershing-2 missiles. Yet in the aftermath of this unofficial move the director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, Eugene V. Rostow, was forced to resign for his "overzealousness.

The Reagan administration has been required to modify its original proposal several times under West European pressure, yet it still has not faced up, even implicitly, to the By Herbert Scoville ized with multiple warheads.

Only now, when the Russians have broken off the intermediaterange forces talks and removed Mr. Reagan's cover for failure to dealseriously with this problem, has his administration given the slightest indication of being willing to merge talks about intermediate-range forces with negotiations about re-ducing intercontinental weapons — a possible politically acceptable tac-

The strategic arms reduction talks are also headed nowhere, despite Mr. Rowny's optimism. No date has been set for their resumption.

In this case, too, the mitial U.S. position was unacceptable. Its cinef weakness - that it would have increased the vulnerability of the weapons by which both sides deter a first strike and would thus have made a nuclear war more likely was recognized by the bipartisan commission on the MX missile.

The position was modified, but as long as Mr. Reagan insists that the MX and the Trident-2 missiles be the mainstays of the American force, he will be undermining the stability of the nuclear balance.

Now Mr. Rowny has expressed optimism that the Russians will soon return to the table and negotiate seriously. Yet he admits that the U.S. proposals, which he recently cussed with President Reagan are no different from those presented last October and that the Rus- mament Agency and deputy director sians have shown little interest in of central intelligence, contributed them. Mr. Rowny says Washington is at last willing to discuss trade-offs of Soviet and American advantages in certain classes of weapons, Such trade-offs are, of course, the essence of any successful arms control negotiations, and yet it is only after three years in office that Mr. Reagan is prepared to discuss them.

Given this record of delayed action, cover-ups and political posturing it is hardly surprising that the American people are skeptical about President Reagan's serious ness about arms control. It is this. public skepticism, in an election year, that explains his concern about the suspension of all nuclear weapons talks with Moscow.

The writer, a former assistant director of the Arms Control and Disar-

No, the Reagan Rhetoric Has Brought Progress

WASHINGTON - A president's words - the government's declaratory policy — can have an enormous effect. President Reagan's much maligned "tough talk" to the Russians, however much it may have alienated European intellectuals and American critics, has created the possibility of real cuts in both countries' nuclear arsenals. A wholly new basis of negotiations has been established, thanks not only to the Reasan administration's success in redressing the military balance but also in large part due to its resolve, as expressed from the start by the president.

Four years ago those of us involved in, for lack of a better term. the intellectual apparatus of the Reagan campaign were deeply con-cerned about the Atlantic alliance about the erosion of its military capabilities and perceptions of division within it. We feared that the steady Soviet arms buildup and accompanying Soviet successes overseas had created a momentum that would be difficult to reverse.

And we knew that the military buildup envisaged by then Governor Reagan's defense advisory groups would not show significant results until the end of his first term, by which time much else could be lost. One thing that could be reversed on command, however, was declaratory policy - rhetoric.

True, empty rhetoric is not a very useful tool. But Mr. Reagan's declaratory policy had sound founda-tions. He had, after all, won an immense victory -- in part because of a perception that American power needed to be strengthened. That in itself improved "the correlation of forces" —to use the Kremlin's term.

Thus it was not merely the ensuing harsb - and truthful - language used by the new president that improved America's standing those words, backed as they were by an electoral mandate for change.

The signs of success are most evident in arms negotiations, despite the suspension of the strategic arms reductions talks and the negotiations in Geneva about intermediateBy W. Scott Thompson range missiles in Europe, Mr. Reagan's rhetoric bas created a new environment for negotiations with Moscow. The Russians now have to deal with an America far more certain of its purpose and its direction, willing to restore parity in nuclear affairs and unwilling any longer to apologize for its policies.

In April 1977, for example, the Polithuro refused even to entertain demands for cuts in its strategie arsenal proposed by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance. The balance today is much less favorable to America, but Moscow has been willing — albeit after much bluster and storm — to negotiate roughly the same cuts with the Reagan administration.

Many Americans and Europeans are confused by the semetimes stormy atmosphere surrounding the negotiations. Europeans in particular are easily upset by it — and that leads critics of the Reagan administration to suggest that his rhetoric indefinitely suspended is just part of the changing weather. This time it is the Russians who have provoked the storm, boping to incite protests. - from the American public and against American policy — to force Washington to deal with Moscow on Moscow's own terms. But it'.

Mubarak Increases in Stature Alongside a 'Moderate' Arafat

By Olfat Tohamy

AIRO - Egypt's unconditional reinstatement as a member of the Islamic Conference Organization could be the first in a series of diplo-matic victories for President Hosni Mubarak and Yasser Arafat.

The day the stormy debates on Egypt began in Casablanca, Mr. Mubarak aggressively stated that "Egypt will remain the leading state in this region whether the others like it or not." Later, his pleasure with the ICO's Jan. 19 decision was made clear when be broke his own protocol rules to receive an ICO committee.

It was Mr. Arafat's praise of Egypt at the Casablanca meeting that ulti-mately swayed Saudi Arabia and other members to renew Egypt's mem-bership, which had been suspended since it made peace with Israel. The PLO chairman did not initiate the motion that led to the decision, but he set the record straight, refuting the notion that Egypt was a renegade that had sold out the Palestinians.

His support stemmed partly from the Egyptian help be received during the difficult siege in the northern Lebanese city of Tripoli, where shiploads of Egyptian arms rescued him from an otherwise uncertain future.

Cairo then took responsibility for Mr. Arafat's departure, along with 4,000 of his men, and safe passage to North Yemen. A warning that Egypt would be ready to go to war if Mr. Arafat's convoy was attacked was formally conveyed to Israel in a letter from President Mubarak to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, Egypt's active concern for the PLO's survival dates back to the Isracli invasion of Lebanon, when Egypt informed the PLO of Israel's intention to reach Beirut.

During their warm encounter in Cairo in December, Mr. Mubarak told Mr. Arafat that Egypt would use its formal links with Israel to try to advance the Palestinian cause. But erosion of relations has diminished Egypt's leverage with Israel. Egypt is principally concerned by Israel's rejection of all peace formulas aside from that of Camp David, and is seeking ways to get around this. The key to a new formula that would meet a longstanding U.S. condition for dealing with the PLO and would offer Israel the promise of security is mutual recognition. But the burden of the first step falls on Mr. Arafat. Egypt is pushing him to a halt last spring. Mr. Arafat and the king had agreed on a confederation, but they disagreed on whether the Palestinian entity would be a state. Mr. Arafat, then restricted by the consensus he always sought as a basis for his leadership, gave in to pressure from his hard-liners and refrained from signing a document he had worked out with the king. This time Egypt is confident that Mr. Arafat is determined to proceed with a peaceful settlement of the Palestinian problem. He has received the backing of the PLO central commit-tee, has taken steps to expel the dissidents who fought him in Tripoli and he seems prepared for the decisive annual meeting of the Palestine National Council. The prospect of a shadow or opposition PLO does not scare him, he has said publicly.

Mr. Mubarak has already started referring to Mr. Arafat as the "moderate" Palestinian leader.

J ERUSALEM — The future of Judea, Samaria and Gaza has been a major stumbling block to peace. Three approaches have failed:

• Withdrawal by Israel to its pre1967 borders. Unacceptable, says Israel, citing the military danger of the territory falling into terrorist hands and the political danger of a PLO state that would be too small and tion (accepted by the Jews of Pales-tine in 1947 but rejected by the Arabs then) has been effectively jettisoned by the Camp David accords.

The only realistic option is a federated solution that grants full autonomy to the residents under joint Israeli-Jordanian administration. The feasibility of such a plan is enhanced by the weakness of Yasser Arafat. With the PLO split into pro-Syrian and pro-Arafat factions, the Arab League's 1974 agreement giving the PLO the sole right to represent Palestine Arabs may be a dead letter. With Mr. Arafat in need of all the friends he can get, he may give King Hussein permission to negotiate m the Palestinians' behalf.

Given the conflicting Jewish and Arab claims and the current demographic and political realities, shared rule is the only option that is realistic and fair and has a chance of being accepted by all sides.

Joint Israeli-Jordanian administrale gues mientous tion with self-rule for the Palestinan and State of State Arabs would fulfill the following as sential needs: The right of Jews to the U.S. The reside in the territories; sufficient is reside in the territories; sufficient to racii military presence to guarantee land to period describe land to the territories. Security: free movement of against classical land to the territories, the right of all residents to choose the land to the territories. In short, the territories are already in joint tenancy, with local residents enjoying considerable autonomy in their internal matters and in their daily lives. What is needed is to edd the state of occupation and work on broader self-rule for the residents under a permanent solution.

Politically, shared rule would conate a Palestinian Arab entity that would not be a sovereign state but would be linked to Israel and Jordan. These states would share in providing the structural and instantional dement for the entire arrangement. The allocation of water resources, the de-velopment of tourism, the creation of a customs union - these are just a

Tuchman on UNESCO

Barbara Tuchman's ringing defense of the free press ("America Cannot Abet Thought Control," IHT, Jan. 26) is admirable, but her starting premise is simply false. She bases her entire argument for U.S. withdrawal from UNESCO on "the regulations proposed at the Paris conference on communications for control of the distribution of news ...

I write as perhaps the strongest American critic, in the past eight years, of UNESCO's communications programs. Moreover, as a member of the U.S. delegation to the Paris conference, I negotiated many of the communications issues.

Lest I be regarded as somehow biased for or against the outcome of those negotiations, it should be recalled that the World Press Freedom Committee, Editor and Publisher magazine and a number of newspaper editorialists reported that for the first time these communications negotiations generally favored the Western free-press position.

Indeed, Mrs. Tuchman's supposed regulations proposed" were the Soviet Union's drafts, not UNESCO's and certainly not the Third World's. to resume talks with King Hussein at the point where they suddenly came tries for the Soviet Union's attempt to exploit their desire for better communications facilities and information flow. The Soviet "regulations" were bargained away with the active belp of Third World countries and the secretariat of UNESCO. There were 49 communications resolutions - not "regulations," as Mrs. Tuchman says; the difference is crucial, for UNESCO resolutions do not have the power of enforcement that "regulation" implies. Of the 49, 33 (including those of the United States and friends) were not objectionable to free-press advocates. Of the remaining 16, the worst - intro-duced by the Soviet Union and East Germany - were withdrawn without ever reaching the flour. On the positive side, for the first time in a decade the biennial general conference --- it was not a "communications conference," as Mrs. Tuchman states — approved programs to study the "watchdog" role of the press, examine governmental censortistp and treat the controversial "new world information order" as an evolving process. All three programs are gains for free-press supporters.

When the conference ended, the World Press Freedom Committee wrote that "if anyone is looking for an assault on the media at this conference serious enough to justify

a U.S. withdrawal from UNESCO, they won't find it." I agree. Neither the World Press Freedom Committee nor Freedom House believes that the struggle over communications has ended - at UNESCO or in the world outside. But that struggle had best be conducted on the basis of realities. Mrs. Tuchman is too respected a historian to join the company of those who would withdraw from UNESCO on the basis of false or misleading information LEONARD R. SUSSMAN week in which Shiite Moslem militias took control from the Lebanese Army.

Mr. Gemayel, who has refused Moslem demands that he resign, said in an interview broadcast on French television Munday that "we are on the threshold of reaching a solution that could revise the whole problem and lead to a formula that could save all of Lebanon."

Even with a nuclear deterrent, the British study says, NATO must modernize its conventional defenses to gain time for diplomacy in the event of a Soviet attack. The experts also urged NATO to acquire missiles for fighter aircraft that would allow them to fire from safe distances, sophisticated drones that could replace airplanes for reconnaissance, and improved vertical takeoff fighters that could enable NATO to continue fighting without major airfields, which would be prime enemy targets.

More money needs to be spent on electronic means to prevent the jamming of communications and the disruption of sophisticated missiles' flight, the report says.

The women's giant slalom was the first event completed on the Olympic Alpine calendar, both the men's and women's downhills having been weather-delayed until later in the week. Cooper and Armstrong, 1-2 after the first run, were only a tenth of a second apart and nearly threequarters of a second ahead of Blanca Fernandez-Ochoa of Spain. It was a lock: All they had to do was stay on their skis. Armstrong turned in a near-per-bly costing her the gold.

Enke was followed by Andrea Schoene of East Germany (1:22.83) and Petruseva (1:23.21). The three had finished in the same order Thursday in the 1,500 meters when Enke's winning time of 2:3.42 broke the Olympic record by seven and a half seconds and Petruseva's world record of 2:04.04.

On a clear, sunny morning, five of the racers finished under the old Olympic record. Valentina Lalenkova of the Soviet Union was fourth in 1:23:68 and Christa Rothenhurger, another East German, clocked 1:23.98 to finish fifth.

Lydia Skohlikova of the Soviet Union won four speed-skating gold medals in 1964; no other woman has ever won more than two golds in the sport at a single Games, yet Enke said she feels no pressure in aiming for her third gold. "The 1,500-meter race was much tougher, as it was more pressure on the nerves," Enke said. "This one was comparatively easy since 1 already had two medals going into it.

If the ice conditions would have been better, I could have gone two seconds faster and aimed for the world record," Petruseva holds the world record for the 1,000 meters.

Schoene said she was satisfied with her performance. "I never counted on a silver in the 1,000, since the 3,000 is my specialty," she

Hamilton Leads Simond, Cerne

SARAJEVO - Scott Hamilton of the United States, the three-time world champion and the heavy favorite to win the men's figure skating competition at the Winter Olympics, took a big first step to-ward the gold medal Monday with an unexpected first-place finish in the compulsory figures phase.

Hamilton, known for his strong free skating, led Jean Christophe Simond of France and Rudi Cerne of West Germany. Simond, who is not strong in free skating, was ex-pected to take an early lead in the compulsory phase, worth 30 per-cent of the total score.

"Winning all three figures is something 1 hadn't expected," Hamilton said. "It's the first time at a world championship or Olympics that I've done that."

Hamilton said he is prepared to win the gold. "I have ever felt physically or emotionally better than this year," he said.

Hamilton will take his lead into Tnesday's short program, where seven compulsory elements will be skated. The final free skating phase is Thursday night. Hamilton's chief opposition is expected to come from Cerne.

Philip Roth and the Ginzburg Memoirs

By Sally Bedell Smith New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Philip Roth has rarely ventured from the written word to the televisioo screen. But when the novelist recently tried to develop a film for British televisioo about a woman's 18-year imprisonment in Soviet penal camps, he was rebuffed in favor of a Hollywood screenwriter whose credits include such shows as "The Untouchables," "Dallas" and "General Hospital."

The reasons for the failure of Roth's nine-month quest for the rights to "Journey Into the Whirlwind," the first part of a vivid, twovolume memoir by the late Eugenia Ginzburg — a onetime teacher and Communist Party leader — remain mysterious. But the story behind his struggle for the rights offers a revealing contrast between the approaches to moviemaking for commercial television in Hollywood and London - and the values that shape those approaches.

It also raises questions about the rights of authors over the presentation of their work in other forms. Ginzburg's publisher, Arnoldo Mondadori, based in Milan, agreed to sell the television rights against the wishes of her son and heir, Vassily P. Aksyonov, a dissident Soviet novelist living in Washing-

What is disturbing goes far beyond my personal interest in the matter," Roth said. "What is disturbing is that a publisher in the West — any publisher — should assume legal ownership of an anthor's property rights just because that author is sealed up behind the Iron Curtain."

A spokesman for Mondadori in New York said company officials would not answer questions about the dispute. "Until all contracts have been signed and scaled, we cannot comment," said the spokesman. Both Mondadori's agent in Hollywood, Tina Nides of Creative Artists Agency, and Will Lorin, the Hollywood scriptwriter who has been awarded the rights, also declined to discuss the matter, Roth's part in the story began last spring, when he decided to try his hand at dramatizing part of Ginzburg's memoir, which he had read some years ago. Claire Bloom, the actress with whom Roth has lived since 1976, had agreed to play the author.

White House Joins Gala to Honor Princess Grace

By Hebe Dorsey

COCKTAIL PARTY at the White House A Feb. 17 for 120 guests, who will pay $3,500 each for the honor, will launch a party-filled weekend celebrating the Princess Grace Foundation, U.S.A.. The weekend also includes a ball for 600 people attended by President Reagan

This will be one of the rare times that the White House opens its doors to charitable functions. Even more unusual is the fact that foreign commercial firms will profit by the event, if only

Among the guests at the gala ball will be Cary Grant, Estee Lauder, Mary Wells, Robert G. Hausman, president of Loews Hotels, designer Vera Maxwell and Lynn Wyatt, an old friend of Princess Grace's who is chairman of the gala

The foundation was created "to encourage and assist in the career development of emerging young artists in the fields of theater and dance." In its first year, it bopes to give $200,000 in awards and scholarships, which will be announced on Nov. 12, the birthday of the princess, who died in 1982 at the age of 52. Gene Lees: Juggling' The Words of the Pope ONN

By Michael Zwerin International Herald Tribune.

MILAN — "This isn't song-writing, it's watchmaking." Gene Lees thought, wrestling with a subtle turn of phrase last month in Tito Fontana's downtown recording studio.

Lees wrote the English lyrics ("Quiet Nights of Quiet Stars") to Antonio Carlos Jobim's "Corcovado." He has a long and close work- the music here and there to fit the ing relationship with Jobim, and many other songwriters. He has ican's permission to adapt rather their approval to change rhythms their approval to change rhythms and even images. But he had no access to his current lyricist, who he considers "the only man with the moral authority and platform to prevent total global disaster."

Lees was adapting the poems of Pope John Paul II, written when he was Karol Wojtyla, a young Polish priest, to fit the music already written by Italian composers Fontana and Sante Palumbo. Italian versions of the songs were released as an album called "Concerto per la Pace" (Concerto for Peace) in early January. Lees's English versions are scheduled to be recorded in early April by Sarah Vaughan. Working from Spanish and Por-nguese (he is fluent in both), as well as from English translations of the poems, Lees also had taken the original Polish edition to his friend the late film composer Bronislan Kaper ("Green Dolphin Street") for a direct translation.

Gigi Campi, a record producer, music publisher and concert promoter, negotiated with the Vatican publishing office for the rights. In the 1960s and '70s Campi, a jazz fan, managed the Kenny Clarke-Francy Boland big band, one of the best ever, and he has commissioned Boland, a Belgian, to write the arrangements backing up Vaughan's renditions of Lees's adaptations.

Lees has written lyrics to music by Bill Evans, Sergio Mendes and Charles Aznavour, for example. His songs have been recorded by Frank Sinatra, Ella Fitzgerald, Peggy Lee, Perry Como and Shirley Bassey, among others. A native Canadian, he now lives in Ojai, Cali-fornia, 75 miles northwest of Los

Investors Express Cautious Interest In London Index Futures, Options

TONDON — London's financial community is preparing to trade in futures and options on a new stock exchange index. Portfolio managers express cautious interest, but even backers of the project concede that London is unlikely to match the roaring success of index trading in the United States over the past two years.

The London Stock Exchange announced plans Monday to begin trading share index options in early May. The contract is to be based on a 100-share index introduced by the exchange Monday.

The new index is updated minute by minute, unlike the old standard, the Financial Times 30-share index, which is updated once an hour. An

For the record, the 100-share index closed Monday at 1,018.3, up 0.3 on the day. (The exchange used a base of 1,000, based on the Jan. 3 level.) The FT index shoped this stage,' Futures -2.4 Monday to close at 803. World wrote recently. The London International Financial Futures Exchange, known as LIFFE, plans to use the new index for a futures contract. Michael Jenkins, chief executive of the exchange, said the new contract should be announced within a few days. The exchange had scheduled an announcement for Monday but canceled it because of a legal hitch. Index futures and options, normally settled in cash, serve two purposes. They allow speculators to bet on the direction of the market, and they let the more cautious investor hedge his portfolio against an adverse LIFFE and the stock exchange say their contracts are likely to be

The options are expected to appeal more to the smaller investor or speculator. They are to be priced at £5 ($7.10) multiplied by the exercise price of the index option. At the current level, that would amount to £5,090. The options should provide some competition to the Ladbroke and IG Index betting systems offered by London bookmakers. The futures contract, on the other hand, is to be much larger and is "geared for institutional investors.

Trading Has Evened Out

The futures exchange, which is about 16 months old, needs a hot new contract, most analysts say. "LIFFE, after a period of some stagnation recently, cannot afford to lose ground at this stage," the trade publication Futures World said recently.

The exchange's four foreign exchange contracts have never taken off.

Its contracts based on Eurodollars and British government bonds have proved more successful, but the level of trading has evened out in recent

Whether the index futures contract will provide a big boost is a matter "I think it's just what we've been looking for in this market," said Peter

J. Watling joint deputy managing director of R.P. Martin PLC, a member of LIFFE. He said the experience in the United States, where "two index futures are popular, proved the concept.

The most successful of those contracts, the Chicago Mercantile Exchange's Standard & Poor's 500 index, averaged turnover of more than "30,000 contracts a day in 1983. If the London contract "goes half as well as the S&P," Mr. Watling said, "we'll all be very pleased."

'Not Overnight Success'

But John Tierney, manager of the financial futures division at Continental Bank in London, predicted that the new contract would "not be the overnight success that the exchange needs."

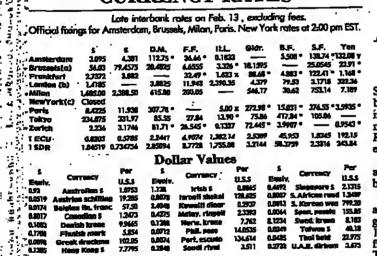

He said London's institutional investors would be slow to use the new hedging tool, waiting for proof of its price performance and liquidity. He inant factor in the U.S. market were much scarcer in Europe.

In addition, he said, U.S. regulations prohibit U.S. banks from trading stock index futures. That removes a major source of funds; the U.S. banks have been major players in LIFFE's Eurodollar and government bond

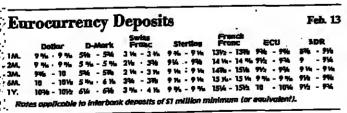

Mr. Tierney and some other futures specialists are more optimistic about the prospects for a U.S. Treasury bond futures contract that LIFFE is expected to announce later this year. European investors are already showing strong interest in that game, he said. International Herald Tribune

MCI's Future Clouded by Deregulation

By Leslie Wayne

WASHINGTON - This spring, U.S. television viewers will be blitzed by new commercials from MCI Communications Corp., the long-distance company that has long played David to American Telephone & Telegraph

In one, a young man prattles on while the telephone bill runs up — AT&T's higher charges and MCT's lower ones. In a second, a tough-talking announcer promises MCI rates "30, 40, and even 50 percent" lower than AT&T's, and a third ad urges consumers to stop "putting off making yourself poorer and AT&T recher."

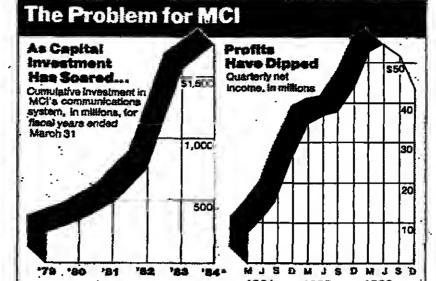

These commercials drew laughs when shown at a recent gathering of New York securities analysts. But it is serious stuff to MCI, which needs to take business from AT&T to shore up its own faltering growth.

For MCI, the ads can not come too soon. By the company's own admission, the next several years will be a far cry from the golden days when MCI doubled its revenue annually and watched its stock grow even faster. "We can't grow at the rate that we once did," said William McGowan, MCI's ebullient chief executive officer, who has battled AT&T for nearly two decades. "There's a rule that no company can be larger than the gross nation-

These days, MCI — whose $1.5 billion in revenue is in fact a minuscule slice of the GNP - must walk a tightrope between an increasingly aggressive AT&T and even lower-priced upstarts breaking into the $45-bilbon long-distance business

"This business won't be the bottomless gold mine it's been so far," said Harry Newton, president of Telecom Library, a trade publisher. Added Ulric Well, an analyst with Morgan Stanley: "They had everything going for them - until recently.

The pummeling of MCI shows up vividly in the stock market. Its shares, which traded as high as $28 in 1983, sold for around $10 in last week's troubled market, a result of dismal third-quarter earnings and grim forecasts of depressed profit for the next two to three years. The company is midway into a huge $2.5-billion capital spending binge on new technologies that has bloated its costs and shrunk its profits.

The company faces the grim prospect of even tougher competition in the years ahead as the telecommunications industry, like airlines before it, goes through an unsettling period of deregulation and potential overca-

"It won't be great for us from a profit or a margin point of view," conceded V. Orville Wright, MCI's president. Company officials see pretax operating margins falling from the present level 27 percent of revenue to about 16 percent, or even lower, and not reviving until about 1986. Analysis are even gloomier, predicting that profit may fall by as much as percent in fiscal 1985.

All this is in sharp contrast to years gone by, when MCl was a corporate wonder tale: a scrappy underdog that, by dint of hard work, clever use of the regulatory environment, and with the guidance of the visionary Mr. McGowan, pulled itself from the brink of death to become a national long-distance provider with some 1.3 million customers. Its microwave towers can transmit calls to 80 percent of U.S. telephones, and it leases other phone lines to offer service to the rest. By moving first into high-density, intercity mar-kets, MCI challenged AT&T — which has 94 (Continued on Page 13, Col. 1)

The U.S. delegation assured the other participants that Washington's policy was aimed at reducing the federal deficit. Beryl Sprinkel, undersecretary of the Treasury for monetary affairs, noted that spend-ing — excluding military expenditures - had been cut to the same share of gross national product as it had been in the 1960s. Longterm Kodak Posts Sharply Lower Earnings

ROCHESTER, New York (Reuters) — Eastman Kodak Co. reported significantly lower fourth-quarter and 1983 results Monday but said it expected increased sales and sharply higher earnings this year. Kodak, in commenting on its results and the outlook for 1984, said it

Kodak, in commenting on its results and the ortilook for 1984, said it had experienced four years of start-up costs for new programs as well as, at the same time, four years of a strengthening dollar and global recession. The company said in a statement, however, that it believed these difficulties were largely behind it.

Kodak reported fourth-quarter net income of $117.4 million or 70 cents a share, down almost 64 percent from $320.7 million, or 1.94 a share, a year earlier. Sales fell 15 percent to $2.57 billion from $3.03 billion. For all of 1983, Kodak had earnings of $565.3 million or $3.41 a share, down almost 52 percent from the $1.16 billion, or $7.12 a share, of

Dresdner Board Member to Resign

FRANKFURT (Reuters) - Manfred Meier-Preschany, a member of TRANKFURI (Reiners) — Manfred Meier-Preschany, a member of the Dresdner Bank management board, will ask to be relieved of his duties at the supervisory board meeting April 3, the bank said Monday. Banking sources said Mr. Meier-Preschany was viewed at one time as a possible candidate to succeed Hans Friderichs as Dresdner's management board chairman if Mr. Friderichs left the bank because of charges in the Flick tax affair.

However, the sources said that Mr. Meier-Preschany had recently been mentioned less as a successor and that another board member, Wolfgang Roller, was now the leading candidate.

France Approves Loan to Renault

PARIS (Reuters) — The government's Industrial Modernization Fund approved a 750-million-franc ($89-million) loan to state-owned Renault. a government source said Monday.

The fund also is due to decide soon on a 500-million-franc loan request from Peugeot SA, industry sources said. . The sources said the Renault loan, to be used for developing a more fnel-efficient car, is expected to be approved by the industry minister, Laurent Fabius, this week. It will carry an interest rate of 9.75 percent and be for five, seven or ten years. Comex, Sydney Market Discuss Link Hanson Raises London Brick Bid

SYDNEY (Reuters) - The Sydney Futures Exchange and the New York Commodity Exchange are discussing a trading relationship or linkage to gold-futures trading, the Sydney exchange said Monday.

A linkage proposal is being developed and an agreement between the Sydney exchange and the Comex has been reached to hold further exclusive negotiations, it said.

The initial objective would be to permit traders to offset or establish gold futures positions on either exchange, which would effectively double trading hours for the Comex 100-ounce contract, it said.

Growing Surplus Seen in Germany

COLOGNE - West Germany's current account surplus is expected to grow to 12 billion Deutsche marks ($4.38 billion) this year and the trade surplus to 50 billion DM, the German Economics Institute said Monday.

The accounts showed provisional surpluses of 8.4 billion DM and 42 billion DM, respectively, last year. The trade measure measures employers' associations, estimated that exports would rise more than 5 percent this year, against a provi sional 0.5 percent increase in 1983.

Lotus Banks on 'New Generation' to Keep Its Software Lead

By David E. Sanger

CAMBRIDGE, Massachusetts - In scarcely a year, Lotus Development Corp. has done for the world of personal-computer soft-ware what International Business Machines Corp. has done for personal computers: Created a product so wildly successful that scores to imitate or improve on it. The company's sole computer program, Lotus 1-2-3, is an "office productivity" 100l that year as the seized the position last year as the bottest-selling software package in the United States.

In its first full year of operation, Lows earned $14.3 million on sales of $53 million. Ahout two-thirds of all U.S. companies buying business microcomputers last year chose 1-2-3 for making complex financial projections and displaying the results instantly in computer-generated pie charts, bar charts and other graphic displays.

Analysts have been consistently enthusiastic about Lotus since the company went public four months ago. But no maker of personalinputer software has managed to market two runaway hits io a row. For Lotus, poised at the edge of what many expect is an imminent shakeout in the software market, producing that second product is considered crucial if it is to maintain the momentum generated by "Anyone who extrapolates from the experiences of Osborne and Victor Technologies to software," Mr. Kapor said, referring to two personal computer makers now in bankruptcy, "isn't being very sophisticated. Those were suicides, not murders."

By the time Symphony is avail-able similar programs will be also, such as Ovation, from Ovation Technologies Inc., and a revised version of Corporate MBA, developed by Context Management Systems. Lotus is expected to lose market share, but at the same time the market itself will be expanding fast. If Symphony matches 1-2-3's some of the most powerful tools for success, the company could find itself mop the business microcomputer-software market, estimated to reach $3 billion in 1985. Moreover, it could exceed analysts' estimates that the company will triple in size this year, to earnings of $40 million on sales of $165 million.

But if Symphony failed, either because the company fails to deliver it on time, or because the company grows so quickly that it loses its competitive edge, Lotus might never regain its current status.

Shareholders who get stuck with this paper will be junior to $5.7 billion of debt beld by banks, insurance companies and the new investor group.

Drexel Burnham Lambert, adviser to the Pickens group along with Lehman Brothers, Kubn Loeb, is understood to have delivered offering documents, known on Wall Street as a private placement, to B carefully controlled list of qualified investors. Although banks often lend money at less than the prime rate, the interest they supposedly charge their best customers, Mr. Pickens is offering senior note bolders (most likely bank lenders) 3 percentage points above the prime rate as ar inducement to join the group.

Part of the plan, as outlined in the confidential document, would call for the sale of Gulf's assets and possibly the "complete liquidation of the company" two to three years from the completion of the tender offer. Depending on the oming, the document said, "investors would realize B compound annual rate of return oo investment of from 27.3 percent to 38.1 percent if all assets were sold by the end of 1986."

If the tender offer were not consummated, an insert to the document said, investors would ger 15 percent of any increase obtained by the Pickens group.

If the group won control of 51 percent, Gulf said it might use its $6 billion to assure that the rest of the stockholders received cash, too.

Occidental Mulls Selling Some Libyan Interests

NEW YORK — Occidental Petroleum Corp. is considering selling half of its 49 percent equity interest in Libya's oil operations to unidentified European interests, industry sources said Monday.

said Monday.

An Occidental spokesman would neither con-firm nor deny industry reports that Occidental's chairman, Armand Hammer, had approached the European interests about the sale. But industry sources said the European parties involved are Austrian, Finnish and Swedish.

The sources said Occidental received an iniually cool response to the idea from President Moamer Gadhafi.

Although the sources could not say whether the European interests were public or private, they said Mr. Gadhafi has been approached with the proposal by Austrian diplomats.

The Occidental spokesman said Occidental's share of Libyan oil output fell in 1983 to an average 98,000 barrels a day from the 111,000 barrels a day pumped in 1982.

PIERRE LOTI The Legendary Romantic

By Lesley Blanch. 336 pp. $15.95. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 757 Third Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Reviewed by Noel Perrin

A HUNDRED years ago, the name of Pierre Loti stood for all in literature that was exotic, un-Victorian, darkly romantic, even exotic, un-Victorian, darkly romantic, even forbidden. Henry James, writing a long essay in 1888, praised Loti's "remarkable genius." Then he added that often the genius's subject matter "is not even mentionable to ears polite." When that brilliant, decadent, scandalous (to ears polite) literary magazine, The Yellow Book, flashed into being in 1894, full of illustrations by Aubrey Beardsley, Loti's name appeared constantly as a touchstone of sophistication. Loti was born near La Rochelle in 1850, the diminutive last child of sping Human. 1850, the diminutive last child of aging Hugue-oot parents. By birth his name was Julien Viaud. At 17 young Viaud joined the French navy as an officer candidate, and commenced a complex triple life. For the next 42 years he was a career naval officer, serving all over the world, commanding ships, fighting in Indochina and Africa. Meanwhile, he became a prominent writer. When he was elected to the French Academy in 1892 (he was commanding a gunboat at Hendaye at the time), he became its youngest member.

Naval officer and oovelist may go together

— though they usually don't — but the third strand of Loo's life fits in very oddly indeed.
This is the strand of pagan voluptuary. It began in 1871. Young "aspirant" Viaud is serving aboard the frigate Flore, flagship of the French Pacific fleet. They cruise to Tahiti. In the time has is on shore living with a Tahidan no time be is on shore living with a Tahioan girl of high rank. By ber rules, not his. He loves the primitive culture. To mark his conversion, at midnight on Jan. 25, 1872, he is baptized (his word) as a Tahitian by the Princess Ariitea. The princess names him Loti. It's all rather like Melville's experience in Polynesia a generatioo earlier — except that where Melville had to jump ship, midshipman Viaud remained a French officer in good standing. And except that while Melville only hints at his more sensual experiences in "Typee" and "Omoo", Viaud is quite explicit in "Le Mariage de Loti."

This was the beginning of an almost endless series of adventures, each leading to a book. An autobiographical novel, normally. (The thio veil it amused Viaud to draw over reality consisted in transposing everything from the French to the British navy. In "Le Mariage de Lou," he is midshipman Harry Grant of H.M.S. Reindeer, his friend Jousselin becomes Plunkett, and so on.) The style of these novels is a bit more fevered and exclamatory than

English and American taste oormally prefers
— but the evocation of exotte places is master-

Adventures followed thick and fast. Ensign Viaud serves on the African coast in 1873, plunges at once into the native life of Senegal, and writes "Le Roman d'un Spahi." Lieutenant Viaud is in the harbor of Salonika (then a Turkish city) in 1876, manages to penetrate a harem, and meets the great love of his life, the young Turkish wife who is the beroine of

Meanwhile, be is not neglecting adventures with men, either. Loti (as he was henceforth known, except on naval ministry records) haknown, except on naval ministry records) habitually took off his officer's uniform and went on shore leave with the crew members of what ever ship he was serving on. He dressed like them. And he was habitually in love with one sailor or another, always picking a tall blond.

Lott himself was extremely short, and minded it. "I was not my type," he once lamented. He also disapproved of his dark complexion, and used lots of make-up. Of course his commanding officers were aware of all this—indeed he once got passed over for promotion.

indeed he once got passed over for promotion because an admiral felt he looked ridiculous in his elevator shoes and mascara. But the 19thcentury French oavy was a remarkably toler-ant place, and in general Loo was given free rein. Later in his career he was able to get leave for such purposes as temporarily joining a Trappist monastery, and for performing as a trapeze artist — he was a superb if miniature whlete - with a circus. These stories and a hundred more Lesley

Blanch narrates in an affectionate tone sharpened with occasional asperity. And enriched by what seems like total knowledge of the many milieus in which Loti flourished. She is a mistress of the telling detail. For example, describing a leave Loo took in 1887 to visit Queen Elizabeth of Romania at Castel Pelesh, she mentions that for once be was in a place where his rouged cheeks would not go incongruously with his uniform, since the Romanians did that sort of thing themselves. Then she adds parentheocally, "though in the [Ro-manian] army, officers under the rank of major were oot permitted make-up." Such touches are frequent and, to me, irresistible.

Few of Loti's books are available in English, and those few are generally the less exotic ones, such as "An Iceland Fisherman". Most of the ones like "Aziyade" have oever been translated. A bundred years ago, there would have been oo point: ears polite would have had hands clapped over them. In more recent times, Loti has been almost forgotten. It seems a fair guess that Blanch's lively biography will change that,

The letter began, "We are writing to ynu today personally to invite you to join with us in the select United States Congressinnal Advisory Board.

"As a charter member you will advise and suppart the mem-

The letter then went no tn say that the "Advisory Board" was in a fight with "well established ultra liheral prganizations who have been unilaterally disarming the U.S. and are trying to keep us from rebuilding our strength."
It said that Sally could hecome a Chairmen's Adviser for $1,000, a Seninr Adviser for $500, a Special Adviser for $250, and a State Adviser for $100, annually of course.

If Sally hecame an adviser to the chairmen, she would receive a "Handsome Engraved Wall Plaque" to hang in her home or office. If she chose to be a senior, special or state adviser she would receive "a 9 x 12 Embossed and Sealed Membership Certificate."

She would also get a "Special Identification Tag" to wear to congressinnal receptions. But most im-portant of all, Sally would "establish one-on-one relationships with Members of Congress and other leaders on the Congessional Advi-

After finishing the letter I said. "It's a helluva honor, Sally, What's

I looked at the letterhead. It was from the "United States Congression of the sales and the problem?"

"I just have a feeling they're trying to get some money out of me."

"That's ridiculous. I'll bet they haven't sent out more than 500,000. letters like this. You should feel ed as co-chairmen. Senator Jake flattered that Garn, Johnston, Garn (Republican-Utah), Senator Kemp and Chappell are seeking J. Bennett Jnhnston (Democrat- your input on the problems of this

"Of course they do. But then they also depend on advice from other sources. Just think of you sitting in a room with these four powerful legislators. They're up a tree on what to do about the arms talks and they turn to you in desperation and say, 'Sally, what do you think we should do to acquire a first-strike capability? "Do you believe they'll really ask my opinion on things like that?"

"Of course they will. They're not going in put someone nn a United States Congressional Advisory Board whose opinion they don't

"How often do you think they'll want to meet with me?"

"It doesn't say here in the letter, but I would guess at least once a day. Also, I imagine when a hig defense bill came up in Congress they would want to call you at home to see how they should vote."

"It's an awesome responsibility," Sally said.
"That's why they're asking you to send in $1,000 annually. This will prevent them from getting advice from deadbeats." Maybe I should just send in $250 and become a 'Special Adviser.' Then I'd have time for other things."

"Ynu have to go fur the big one,
"No respectable

Sally," I told her. "No respectable United States senator or congressman is going to take advice from somebody who won't put her mnney where her mouth is."

Putting Civilization Back Into Tarzan

By Nancy Mills

T ONDON - Ynu can take the I man out of the jungle, but you can't take the jungle out of the man. Few people remember that the original Tarzan book dealt with the return of the apereared man to civilization and his rejection of his aristocratic English heritage. But everyone will be reminded this spring with the release of "Greystoke: The Legend of Tarzan, Lord of the Apes." The director Hugh Hudson has been spending the last two years and a Warner Bros. budget of nearly $30 million preparing this movie. "It's no remake," Hudson insists. "This is the original story of Tarzan growing up, lost in the jungle. It's never been done, except in early 1918 or so."

The Tarzan adventures have been retold and embellished to such a degree in the last 72 years that the story of how the ape man came to be has been practically forgotten. Edgar Rice Burroughs helped confuse matters by writing 25 fanciful sequels to his best-selling "Tarzan of the Apes." "It's the ultimate adventure story," says Hudson, "but it's also about a conflict: innocence being defiled by society, by rules. Society tries to suck Tarzan in, hut he refuses to compromise. In this sense, he's very much like Abrahams and Liddell in Chariots of Fire." Hudson directed the Oscar-winning "Chariots of Fire." It was his first feature film after a 20-year career in Britain making prize-winning commercials and documentaries. Greystnke is his follow-up film, and he'd like to prove he's nn 46-year-old flashin-the-pan.

Hudson feels strongly about the Tarzan myth and hopes to lay to rest Tarzan's image as a piece of beefcake - or worse, a cartoon, "Tarzan represents everyman," says Hudson, "and Jane, everywoman. They are every-hody's ideal of how life should be. We need myths like Tarzan, Ulysses, Zapata, King Arthur, Adam and Eve, and the Nordic and Icelandic sagas."

As Tarzan and Jane, Hudson hired the French actnr Christopher Lambert and an American

Choosing a believable Tarzan was nne of Hudson's key concerns. "I was looking for someone totally away from the Charles Atlas-Inhnny Weissmuller mold," he explains. "Weissmuller was a beautiful m.m. but I wanted someone you felt was a wild boy but who had a noble side. He had to look vulnerable, hut he also needed a lithe body."

Hudson spent months auditioning about 300 candidates. Finally he found his Tarzan in France. Christopher Lambert is a
